vacuate superfluous and heterogeneous humours, purify the mals of blood: the humours which are generated in the blood are excreted by the glands, and are replaced by a fufficient quantity of aliment.

EXCRETORY, in anatomy, a term applied to certain little ducts or veffels, deltined for the reception of a fluid, fecreted in certain glandules, and other viscera, for the excretion of it in the appropriated places.

Letters of Exculpation, in Scots law, a writ or fummons issued by authority of the court of justiciary, at the instance of a panel, for citing witheffes to prove his defences, or his objections to any of the jury or witnesses cited against him. See tit. 33

EXCURSION, in aftronomy, is used in a synonymous fenfe with elongation. See ELONGATION.

EXECRATION, in antiquity, a kind of punishment, confishing of direful curses and marks of infamy: such was that used against Philip king of Macedon, by the Athenians. A general affembly of the people being called, they made a decree, that all the statues and images of that king, and of all his ancestors, should be demolished, and their very names razed; that all the festivals, facred rites, priests, and whatever else had been instituted in honour of him, should be prophaned; that the very places where there had been any monument or inscription to his honour, should be detestable; that nothing should be set up, or dedicated in them, which could be done in clean places: and, laftly, that the priefls, as often as they prayed for the Athenian people, allies, armies, and fleets, should as many times detell and execrate Philip, his children, kingdom, land and fea forces, and the whole race and name of the Macedonians.

EXECUTION, in a general fense, the act of accomplishing, finishing, or atchieving any thing.

EXECUTION of fummonies or letters, in Scots '1w, fee Law, tit. 12. Execution of testaments; see tit. 28. Execution of civil fentences and decrees; fee tit. 22. Execution of criminal sentences; see tit. 33.

EXECUTOR, in Scots law, fignifies either the person intitled to fucceed to the moveable estate of one deceafed, or who by law or special appointment is intrusted with the administration of it. See tit 28.

EXECUTRY, in Scots law, is the moveable estate falling to the executor. Under executry, or moveables, is comprehended every thing that moves itself, or can be moved: fuch as corns, cattle, furniture, ready money, &c. See tit. 9. and 28.

EXEDRÆ, in antiquity, a general name for such buildings as were distinct from the main body of the churches, and yet within the limits of the church taken in its largest sense. Among the exedræ the chief was the baptistory. See Baptistory.

EXEGESIS, a difcourse by way of explanation or comment upon any subject. In the Scotch univerlities, there is an exercise among the students in divinity, called an exegefis, in which a question is flated by the respondent, who is then opposed by two or three other fludents in their turns; during which time the profeffor moderates, and folves the difficulties which the respondent cannot overcome.

EXEMPLAR, denotes much the fame with model. See Mobil.

Vot. II. No. 48.

the glands. Excretions, by which we mean those that e- EXEMPLIFICATION of letters patent, a transcript or duplicate of them, made from the involument thereof, and scaled with the great scal.

EXEMPTION, in law, a privilege to be free from fome fervice or appearance: thus, barons and peers of the realm are, on account of their dignity, exempted from being sworn upon inquests; and knights, clergymen, and others, from appearing at the sheriff's turn. Perfons of feventy years of age, apothecaries, &c. are also by law exempted from serving on juries; and justices of the peace, attorneys, &c. from parishoffices,

EXERCISE, among phylicians, such an agitation of the body, as produces falutary effects in the animal œconomy. See MEDICNE.

Exercise, in military affairs, is the ranging a body of foldiers in form of battle, and making them perform the feveral motions and military evolutions with different management of their arms, in order to make them expert therein.

EXERCITOR, in Scott law, he who employs a ship in trade, whether he be owner, or only freights her from the owner.

EXERGUM, among antiquarians, a little space around or without the figures of a medal, left for the infcription, cypher, device, date, &c.

EXETER, the capital city of Devonshire, struated on the river Ex, ten miles north of the British channel:

W. long. 3° 40', N. lat. 50° 44'.

EXFOLIATION, a term used by surgeons for the scaling of a bone, or its rising and separating into thin laminæ or fcales.

EXHALATION, a general term for all effluvia or steams raised from the surface of the earth in form of vapour.

EXHIBIT, in law, is where a deed, or other writing, being produced in a chancery fuit, to be proved by witnesses, the examiner, or commissioner appointed for the examination of any fach, certifies on the back of the deed or writing, that the fame was shewn to the witness at the time of his examination, and by him fworn to.

EXHORTATION, in thetoric, differs only from suafion, as being more directly addressed to the passions.

EXIGENT, in law, a writ which lies where the defendant in a personal action cannot be found, nor any effects of his within the county, by which he may be attached or distrained.

EXIGENTERS, four efficers in the court of commonpleas, who make all exigents and proclamations, in all actions where process of outlawry lies. Writs of superfedeas, as well as the prothonotaries upon exigents. were likewise drawn up in their office.

EXILE. See Banishment.

EXISTENCE, that whereby any thing has an actual essence, or is said to be. See Metaphysics, EXIT in a theatrical fense, the action of a player in going off the flage, after he has played his part.

EXLEGALITUS, among lawyers, the same with an outlawed perfon.

EXOCOETUS, the Flying-tish, in ichthyology, a genus belonging to the order of abdominales. The head is fealy, and it has no teeth; it has ten radii in the branchiollege membrane; the body is whitili, and